
WorldVoice Library
The Blue Envelope
A London Mystery
A1
Ahmed Al-Qashar

WORLDVOICE LIBRARY

The Blue Envelope

A London Mystery

Written by

Ahmed Al-Qashar

ENGLISH GRADED READERS

A1 · Beginner

An original WorldVoice Library novel

2026 · Editorial review edition

Publication & Rights

The Blue Envelope. Written by Ahmed Al-Qashar.

WorldVoice Library - English Graded Readers, A1.

Copyright © 2026 Ahmed Al-Qashar. All rights reserved.

This is an original work of fiction created for WorldVoice Library. The people, places, and events in the story are fictional.

First editorial review edition: November 2026.

The A1 level is the intended learning level. It has not been independently assessed or certified. A final language-level review is recommended before commercial publication.

This review edition has no ISBN and is not a commercial release.

The cover design and interior line illustrations were created for this edition.

Book format: 6 × 9 inches. Interior: black text on white pages; monochrome illustrations.

Read · Learn · Explore

Story Introduction

A blue envelope. An old library. A race against Friday.

Adam works in a print shop in London. He wants to save an old library near the river. One rainy day, a blue envelope arrives for him. Inside is a small key and a secret note.

Someone says an old paper can stop the library from closing. But the paper is missing, and a businessman wants to buy the building. Adam and his friend Emma have only a few days to find the truth.

Before You Read

1. Look at the cover. What do you think is inside the blue envelope?

2. Why might someone want to close an old library?

3. Have you ever found a letter or a key? What did you do?

Useful Words Before Reading

envelope - paper that holds a letter

key - a small metal thing that opens a lock library - a place where people read or borrow books clue - something that helps you find an answer secret - something that not everyone knows

Characters

The people you will meet in the story

Adam Reed

A young man who works in a print shop. He wants to save the old library.

Emma

Adam's friend. She is careful, brave, and good at asking questions.

Mrs Lewis

A kind woman who looks after the old library. Her first name is Margaret.

Mr Carter

The old library's caretaker. He knows its rooms and its history.

Miss Green

A woman from the town office. She wants to find the true papers.

Mr Gray

A man from the town office. He is trying to keep old things safe.

Mr Price

A businessman who wants to buy the old library.

Contents

The Blue Envelope · English A1

The Blue Envelope 7

The Old Library 10

The River Picture 13

The Light Upstairs 16

The Small Room 19

The Man at the Station 22

The Last Page 25

Glossary 28

Reading Comprehension 31

Short Answer Questions 35

Think · Speak · Write 37

Final Test 39

Answer Key 43

Read all seven chapters before doing the exercises at the back of the book.

CHAPTER 1

The Blue Envelope

On Monday morning, rain fell on the streets of London. Adam Reed stood inside a small print shop. He worked there every day. He made posters, cards, and signs. Today he had a new poster on his desk. It said, SAVE OUR OLD LIBRARY.

The old library was near the river. It had been closed for many years. Now a company wanted to buy the building. The company wanted to make new offices there. Adam did not like this plan. When he was a boy, his mother took him to that library every Saturday.

Adam looked at the poster. His friend Emma came in with two cups of tea. Emma worked at the shop, too. She put a cup beside him. “You are still thinking about the library,” she said.

“I am,” Adam said. “My mother loved that place. It was full of books. I want children to go there again.”

“Then we must do something,” Emma said. “A poster is a start. It is not the end.”

At ten o’clock, a man brought a box of paper to the shop. After he left, Adam saw something on the floor by the door. It was a blue envelope. The paper was thick and clean. A small gold letter, M, was on the front. Under it were two words: FOR ADAM.

Adam picked it up. He did not know anyone with the name M. The envelope had no address and no stamp. He looked outside, but the man with the box was gone.

“Open it,” Emma said.

Adam broke the seal. Inside he found a short letter and a little silver key. The letter said: “The old library can stay open. There is a paper inside. This paper can help us. Come to the side gate at six tonight. Bring the key. Tell no one. - M.”

Emma read the letter over his shoulder. “Tell no one?” she said. “I do not like those words.”

“Maybe someone needs help,” Adam said. He turned the key in his hand. It was small and cold. On one side was a picture of an open book.

“Perhaps it is a trick,” Emma said.

Adam put the letter on the desk. “Then why give me a key? Why talk about the library?”

Emma sat down. She was quiet for a minute. “I will go with you,” she said at last.

“But the letter says - ”

“I know what it says,” she answered. “I am still going.”

For the rest of the day, Adam tried to work. He put the same word in the wrong place on a poster three times. He saw the blue envelope every time he looked at the desk. Outside, the rain stopped. The sky was still dark.

At five thirty, he closed the shop. Emma was waiting at the door with her coat on. They walked to the river. Buses went past them. People hurried home. In the distance, the old library stood between two tall buildings. Its windows were black.

At six, a woman came out of the shadows beside the side gate. She had a grey coat and a red scarf. “Adam Reed?” she asked quietly.

“Yes,” he said.

“Good,” the woman said. She looked behind them. “You came. Please come inside. We have very little time.”

CHAPTER 2

The Old Library

The woman opened a narrow door beside the gate. Adam and Emma followed her into a small garden. The path was wet, and little plants grew between the stones. At the end of the path stood a heavy wooden door.

"My name is Mrs Lewis," the woman said. "I help to look after this place. It is very old, and it needs a lot of work."

"Did you send the blue envelope?" Adam asked.

Mrs Lewis did not answer. She opened the door and took them inside.

The library was dark and cold. A long room stood before them. Tall shelves went from the floor almost to the ceiling. Some shelves had books. Others were empty. A great clock hung above the door. It did not move.

"Why is the clock stopped?" Emma asked.

"It has not worked for ten years," Mrs Lewis said. "But there was a time when this room was full of people. I remember the sound of the clock. I remember the children, too."

An old man came from behind a shelf. He wore a brown jacket and carried a small lamp. "I am Mr Carter," he said. "I have the keys to most rooms here. Mrs Lewis told me that you wanted to help."

"We do," Adam said. He took the silver key from his pocket. "I got this in a letter."

Mr Carter looked at the key. "An open book," he said. "I know that picture. The woman who opened this library used it on all her letters."

"What was her name?" Emma asked.

"Miss Ada Bell," Mr Carter said. "She opened this place many years ago. She wanted every person in the city to have a place to read."

Mr Carter led them to a little desk near the back wall. There was a picture of a book on one drawer. Adam put in the silver key. He turned it once. The drawer opened.

Inside were an old photograph and a small white card. The photograph showed a young woman standing in front of the library. Many people stood beside her. On the back were the words: OPENING DAY, 1908.

Adam turned over the white card. It said, “Look at the river in the picture. The next answer is not far away.”

“There are many pictures here,” Emma said. She looked at the walls. “Where is the river?”

“Perhaps in that one,” said Adam. A large painting hung beside the long table. It showed the river and an old bridge. The water was blue, but the sky was grey. The painting looked very old.

Before they could go near it, someone knocked hard on the front door. Mr Carter put down his lamp. A man’s voice called from outside.

“Carter! Open this door. I know you are there.”

Mrs Lewis went pale. “It is Mr Price,” she said. “He is the man who wants to buy the library.”

Mr Carter spoke softly. “Do not show him the photograph. Not yet.”

Adam put the card and the photograph in his coat. The knocking came again. This time it was louder. The old clock did not move, but Adam felt that their time was going very fast.

CHAPTER 3

The River Picture

Mr Carter opened the front door. A tall man in a black coat came in. His shoes were wet, and he carried a leather bag. His face was not kind.

"Why are these people here?" the man asked. He looked first at Adam, then at Emma.

"They are helping me clean," Mr Carter said.

"At this time of night?" the man said. "I am Peter Price. My company will buy this building on Friday. It is not safe. No one can come here without my word."

"The building is not yours yet," Emma said.

Mr Price turned to her. "And who are you?"

"A friend of the library," she answered.

Mr Price looked at the long shelves. "This place is empty. People read on their phones now. We can make something new here."

"We can make the library new," Adam said.

Mr Price laughed once, but there was no joy in it. "You cannot stop the sale with a few posters." He went out. His footsteps were loud on the stone floor.

Mr Carter closed the door. “He comes here every week,” he said. “He wants us to leave.”

“Does he have a right to buy it?” Adam asked.

“The town office says he does,” Mr Carter replied. “But Miss Bell gave this building to the people. There was a paper about it. That paper is missing.”

Adam thought about the letter in the blue envelope. It said that a paper could save the library. “Then we must find it,” he said.

They stood in front of the river painting. Emma held the lamp high. Adam looked at the frame. There was a little space between the painting and the wall. He put his fingers behind it and felt something hard.

He carefully lifted the painting. Behind it was a small square in the wall. In the square were an empty shelf and a piece of blue thread. There was also a little dust. Someone had taken something from that place.

“Was there a box here?” Emma asked.

“I do not know,” Mr Carter said. “I have not moved this painting for years.”

Adam looked down. There were marks on the floor. They were dark and wet. One mark was long. The other was round. “Someone stood here today,” he said. “Look at the mud.”

Mrs Lewis came closer. “Mr Price came here yesterday,” she said. “I saw him near this wall.”

“Then he may have the paper,” Emma said.

“But we must know,” Adam answered. “We cannot go to the town office with only a story.”

From outside came the sound of a car. They went to the window. A black car was leaving the street. The driver wore a hat. Adam could not see his face.

Emma took out her little notebook. She wrote down the time and the colour of the car. “We need facts,” she said. “Not only ideas.”

Mrs Lewis looked at the empty square in the wall. “Miss Bell had one special book,” she said. “It was the first book in this library. I think that book can help us.”

“What book?” Adam asked.

“I cannot remember its name,” she said. “But I know where we must look next. Upstairs, there is a small room.”

CHAPTER 4

The Light Upstairs

The stairs were narrow. Mrs Lewis went first, with the lamp. Mr Carter stayed downstairs to close the windows. Adam and Emma followed her slowly. They could hear the old wood under their feet.

At the top of the stairs was a short hall. Five doors stood along it. Four were shut. A weak yellow light came from under the last door.

"I thought no one was here," Emma said.

"Someone may be working," Mrs Lewis answered. Her voice was very low.

They walked to the last door. Adam knocked. There was no answer. He pushed it open. Inside was a reading room with two desks, three chairs, and a high window. A small electric lamp was on.

A woman sat at one desk. She had short hair and glasses. She stood up very quickly when she saw them. "You are late," she said to Mrs Lewis. "I thought you were not coming."

"This is Miss Green," Mrs Lewis said. "She works at the town office. She has been looking for the old papers."

Miss Green looked at Adam and Emma. "The town office wants to sell this building. But I think we need to read every old paper first. There are boxes here with papers from many years ago."

"Does Mr Price know you are here?" Emma asked.

“No,” Miss Green said. “He wants the sale on Friday. I want the truth.”

Miss Green opened a large book on the table. There were names and dates on every page. “This is the library book from its first year,” she said. “Miss Bell wrote down the names of the people who gave money and books.”

Adam ran a finger down one page. Then he stopped. Near the bottom was a name: E. REED.

“My family name,” he said.

Miss Green turned the book to the light. “Edith Reed gave books to the library in 1908,” she read. “Do you know that name?”

“My mother’s grandmother was called Edith,” Adam said. He smiled for the first time that evening. “I did not know she came here.”

Emma looked at him. “Your family has loved this library for a very long time.”

Miss Green showed them a blank space at the end of the page. “There was another paper here,” she said. “It is gone. Someone took it out.”

Mrs Lewis looked at the floor. “I must tell you something,” she said. “The blue envelope was mine. My first name is Margaret. That is why I wrote M.”

“Why did you not tell us?” Adam asked.

“I was afraid,” she answered. “Mr Price looks at all the letters we get here. I saw you making your posters. I knew you cared. I found Miss Bell’s key, so I sent it to you.”

Adam put the silver key on the desk. “Thank you for trusting me,” he said.

“I know there was a signed letter,” Mrs Lewis said. “Miss Bell wrote it when she gave the library to the town. But I do not know where it is now.”

At that moment, a door closed downstairs. All four people stopped talking. They heard quick steps. Then the steps stopped. Someone else was in the library.

CHAPTER 5

The Small Room

Adam went to the door. He listened. The building was quiet again. Emma held the lamp. Miss Green closed the big book and put it under the desk.

"Do not run," Mrs Lewis said. "The stairs are old."

They went down together. In the hall, Mr Carter stood beside the river painting. He looked worried. "A man was here," he said. "He came through the front door with a key. When he saw me, he went out."

"Was it Mr Price?" Adam asked.

"No. It was Mr Gray from the town office. He carried a long wooden box."

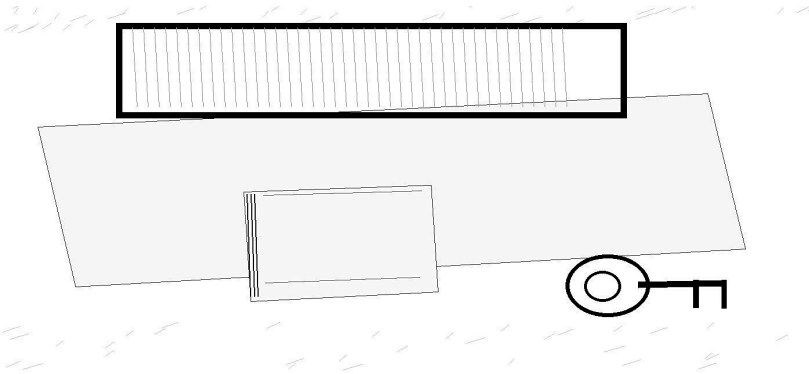

"Why was he here?" Miss Green asked. "He told me that he was going home."

Mr Carter shook his head. "I do not know. He left something on the floor."

There was a little piece of brown paper near the door. On it was a label: NORTH STATION - STORE ROOM.

"Why would a man take a box from the library to the station?" Emma asked.

"Perhaps he is moving old things," Miss Green said. "The station has a store room for town papers."

Adam looked at the river painting again. The blue thread was still behind it. He touched the thread. It was tied to a small nail in the wall. At the end was a tiny paper tag.

He read the words on the tag: "THE FIRST BOOK."

"Mrs Lewis was right," Adam said. "The first book is important."

Mr Carter thought for a moment. "I remember something. There was a wooden sign over the library door. It said, THE OPEN DOOR. On opening day, Miss Bell put a book under that sign. She called it the first book."

"But the sign is not here now," Mrs Lewis said. "Someone took it last month."

Emma looked at the brown label. "Maybe Mr Gray has the sign. Maybe the book is in the box, too."

"The station closes at nine," Miss Green said. She looked at her watch. "It is eight fifteen now."

Adam picked up his coat. "We can get there."

"I can speak to Mr Gray," Miss Green said. "He knows me. He must tell us why he took the box."

Mrs Lewis stayed with Mr Carter. Before Adam left, she took his hand. "Miss Bell loved this place," she said. "She gave her life to it. I do not want the last light to go out."

"It will not," Adam promised. He did not know if he could keep his word, but he wanted to try.

Adam, Emma, and Miss Green hurried into the cold street. A train whistle sounded in the distance. The clock on the church showed half past eight. They had only thirty minutes before the store room closed.

As they turned the corner, Adam saw a black car near the station road. He knew that car. It had been outside the library. Now it was following them.

CHAPTER 6

The Man at the Station

The station was full of noise. People waited with bags. A little girl slept beside her father. A man sold newspapers near the steps. Above the main door, a large clock showed twenty minutes to nine.

Adam, Emma, and Miss Green went quickly past the ticket office. Miss Green knew the way to the store room. It was at the end of a long hall, behind a door with a glass window.

Inside, a thin man in a grey suit stood beside a wooden box. He had a pen in his hand. Miss Green knocked on the glass.

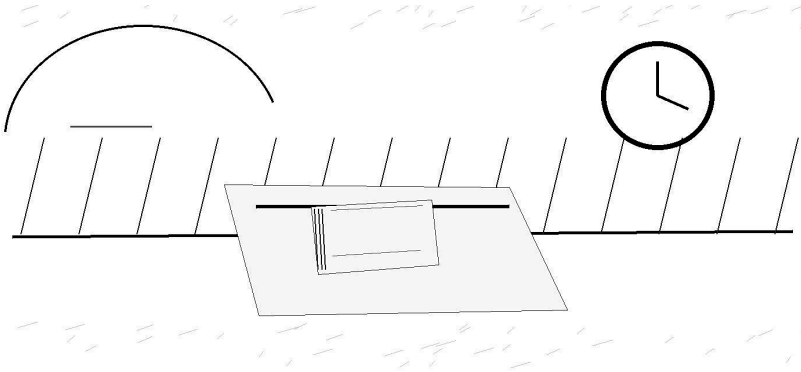

"Mr Gray," she said when he opened the door. "We need to ask you about that box."

Mr Gray looked at the three of them. "What is wrong?" he asked. "I am putting old town things in a safe place."

"Why did you take the box from the library?" Adam asked.

Mr Gray looked down. "Because rain comes through the roof. I did not want the old sign to get wet."

He opened the box. Inside lay a long wooden sign with gold words: THE OPEN DOOR. Under the sign was a little red book.

"That book was under the sign," Mr Gray said. "I thought it was only an old storybook. I was going to put it in a glass case."

Mrs Lewis's words came back to Adam: THE FIRST BOOK. He asked, "May I look at it?"

Mr Gray gave him the book. Adam opened it very slowly. On the first page were the words: "For the people of this town. May every open book open a new door. Ada Bell, 1908."

Emma smiled. "That is beautiful," she said.

Adam turned another page. A small piece of paper fell onto the table. It was folded into four parts. The paper was yellow with age. There was a dark blue mark on one corner.

Miss Green picked it up. "Do not touch it more than you need to," she said. "It is very old." She opened it flat on the table. At the bottom were two names and a date. One name was Ada Bell. The other was a town officer.

She read it aloud in simple words. “Miss Bell gives this building to the town. It must be a free library for all people. The town must look after it.”

Adam could hardly speak. “Is this the paper?” he asked.

“I think so,” Miss Green said. “We need to check it at the town office. But it has the names and the date we need.”

A voice came from the door. “That paper is not yours.”

Mr Price stood in the hall. He had followed them from the library. His face was red. “Give it to me,” he said. “That building is part of my plan.”

Miss Green stood between him and the table. “The paper is a town record,” she said. “You cannot take it.”

“I have a meeting on Friday,” Mr Price answered. “The sale will go on.”

“Then we will bring the paper to the meeting,” Emma said.

Mr Price looked at them for a long moment. Then he turned and walked away. They heard his steps until he reached the main hall.

Mr Gray found a clean folder. Miss Green put the paper inside. “I will take it to the town office tomorrow morning,” she said. “And we will all be there on Friday.”

At nine o’clock, the station bell rang. Adam looked at the blue envelope in his pocket. It had brought him here. Now he had to wait for Friday.

CHAPTER 7

The Last Page

Friday morning was bright and cold. Adam stood outside the town hall with Emma. Mrs Lewis, Mr Carter, Miss Green, and Mr Gray were there, too. All around them stood people from the street. Some held the posters Adam had made: SAVE OUR OLD LIBRARY.

Inside the hall, men and women sat at long tables. The chair of the meeting asked everyone to be quiet. Mr Price sat near the front. He did not look at Adam.

Miss Green stood up. She held a folder in her hands. "We have found an important paper," she said. "It is from 1908. Ada Bell gave the old library to the town. She wanted the building to stay a free library for everyone."

She put the paper on a large table. Two officers looked at the names and the date. They read the other old records beside it. The room was very quiet.

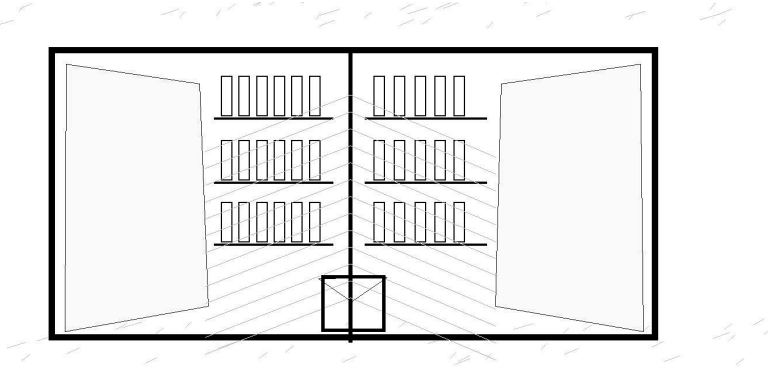

Mr Price stood. "The building is old," he said. "It needs money. I can make it useful again."

"It can be useful as a library," Emma said from the back of the hall.

The chair looked up. "Please let Miss Green finish," she said.

Miss Green showed the first book and the wooden sign. She talked about Miss Bell and the people who gave books in 1908. Mr Carter told the meeting how many children used to come every day.

Mrs Lewis told them about the long years when the library was closed.

Then Adam stood. He was nervous. His hands were cold. But he remembered his mother, her kind voice, and the first time she put a book in his hands.

“I was a boy when I came to the library,” he said. “I did not have many books at home. Here, I could read any book I wanted. My mother said a book is like a door. It can take you anywhere.”

He looked at the people in the room. “We can repair this building. We can clean the rooms. We can give our time. We do not need to lose this place.”

The chair thanked him. The officers said the old paper was part of the town’s records. Because of that paper, the plan for the sale could not go ahead that day. The council would keep the building and make a new plan for it.

People began to smile. Someone clapped. Then many people clapped. Mrs Lewis put her hands over her face. Mr Carter smiled and looked down at the first book.

In the weeks that followed, people came to help. They cleaned the windows. They painted the doors. They brought old books and new books. Mr Gray fixed the wooden sign above the front door. Emma wrote a story for the town newspaper. Adam made a new poster: THE OPEN DOOR LIBRARY - OPEN AGAIN.

On the first day, Adam stood just inside the library. The great clock above the door was moving again. A little boy came in with his mother. He looked up at the books in wonder.

"Is it free?" he asked.

"Yes," Adam said. "It is for everyone."

Mrs Lewis came to his side. She held a blue envelope. It was the same envelope from Monday morning. "You can keep this," she said. "It belongs to you now."

Adam smiled. "No," he said. "It belongs here." He put it in a little glass case beside the first book. Under it, he placed a card: ONE SMALL LETTER HELPED OPEN A BIG DOOR.

The boy read the card. "Was there a secret?" he asked.

"There was," Adam answered. "And now there are a thousand stories waiting for you."

Outside, the city was busy. Inside, the library was quiet and full of light. Adam opened the blue envelope one last time. There was no new letter, and there was no new key. He did not need one. The door was already open.

Glossary

40 useful words from the story · in alphabetical order

Read each word, its meaning, and the short example. You can return to the story if you need help.

Word	Meaning	Example
address	the place where a person lives or works	There is no address on the envelope.
answer	what you say or find after a question	The paper gives Adam an answer.
bell	a thing that makes a ringing sound	The station bell rings at nine.
building	a house, school, shop, or other large place	The old library is a beautiful building.
card	a small piece of paper with words on it	Adam reads a white card.
clap	to put your hands together to show you are happy	The people clap at the meeting.
clock	a thing that shows the time	The old clock does not move.
coat	clothes you wear over other clothes	Mrs Lewis wears a grey coat.
company	a business	A company wants to buy the building.
corner	a place where two streets meet	The car turns the corner.

Word	Meaning	Example
council	people who make decisions for a town	The council talks about the library.
drawer	a box that moves in and out of a desk	The key opens a small drawer.
empty	with nothing inside	Some of the shelves are empty.
envelope	paper that covers and holds a letter	Adam finds a blue envelope.
facts	things that are true	Emma says they need facts.
folder	something that holds papers together	Miss Green puts the old paper in a folder.
gate	a door in a wall or fence	Adam waits by the side gate.
hall	a large room, or a long space with doors	They walk into a dark hall.
key	a small metal thing that opens a lock	Adam holds a silver key.
lamp	a light you can put on a desk	Mr Carter carries a lamp.
letter	words written to another person	There is a short letter inside.
library	a place where people can read or borrow books	The library has many tall shelves.
look after	to keep something safe and in good condition	Mr Carter looks after the library.
mark	a line or place that you can see on something	Adam sees a dark mark on the floor.
meeting	a time when people come together to talk	They go to the meeting on Friday.
mud	wet earth	There is mud on the floor.

Word	Meaning	Example
narrow	not wide	They walk through a narrow door.
officer	a person with an official job	A town officer signs the old paper.
painting	a picture made with paint	A river painting hangs on the wall.
paper	a thin material we write or print on	The old paper has two names.
poster	a large paper with words or pictures	Adam makes posters for the library.
repair	to make something work again	People repair the old building.
sale	when something is sold for money	The sale cannot go ahead.
seal	a special mark that closes a letter	The envelope has a gold seal.
shelf	a flat place on a wall for books	There is a book on the shelf.
sign	words or a picture that tell people something	The old sign says THE OPEN DOOR.
stamp	a little paper picture on a letter	The blue envelope has no stamp.
store room	a room for keeping things	Mr Gray takes the box to a store room.
thread	a thin piece of string	Adam finds a blue thread.
truth	what really happened	Miss Green wants the truth.

Reading Comprehension

Read the full story first. Choose A, B, or C.

1. Where does Adam work?

A. At a print shop
B. At a hospital
C. At a train station

2. What does Adam find at the shop?

A. A red book
B. A blue envelope
C. A new phone

3. What is inside the envelope?

A. A photograph and money
B. A letter and a small key
C. A map and a pen

4. Who goes with Adam to the library?

A. Emma
B. Mr Price
C. Miss Bell

5. What colour is Mrs Lewis's scarf?

A. Green
B. Blue
C. Red

6. Who opened the library many years ago?

A. Miss Ada Bell
B. Mr Price
C. Mr Gray

7. What does Adam find in the desk?

A. A book and a lamp
B. A photo and a card
C. Money and a watch

8. What is in the large painting?

A. A train
B. The river
C. A garden

9. What does Mr Price want to do?

A. Buy the library
B. Write a book
C. Work at the station

10. What does Adam see on the floor?

A. Wet marks
B. Flowers
C. A hat

11. Who works at the town office?

A. Emma
B. Miss Green
C. Mrs Lewis

12. What is Mrs Lewis's first name?

A. Mary
B. Margaret
C. Martha

13. What is written on the small tag?

A. The first book
B. Come tomorrow
C. Please leave

14. Where do Adam and Emma go at night?

A. To the station
B. To the park
C. To the hospital

15. What is in Mr Gray's wooden box?

A. A sign and a red book
B. Two blue coats
C. A painting and a clock

16. Where do they find the important paper?

A. Inside the first book
B. Under a bus seat
C. Behind a lamp

17. Who asks for the paper at the station?

A. Mr Carter
B. Mr Price
C. A child

18. What happens at the Friday meeting?

A. The sale stops that day
B. The library burns down
C. Adam leaves London

19. Who helps to repair the library?

A. The people in the town
B. Only Mr Price
C. No one

20. Where does Adam put the blue envelope at the end?

A. In a glass case
B. In a river
C. In his old desk

Short Answer Questions

Write one or two sentences for each question.

1. Why does Adam care about the old library?

2. Why is Emma worried about the note in the envelope?

3. What does the silver key open?

4. What does the river picture help them find?

5. Why does Mrs Lewis write only M on the envelope?

6. Why does Mr Gray take the wooden box to the station?

7. What does Miss Green read on the old paper?

8. How do people help the library after the meeting?

Think · Speak · Write

Talk with a partner. Then write your ideas in English.

1. What is your favourite place to read? Why?

2. Would you open a letter with no address? Why or why not?

3. Which person in this story do you trust most?

4. Why is a library important for a town?

5. Which scene in the story do you remember best?

Writing Task

Write 6–8 sentences about a place in your town that is important to you. Where is it? Who goes there? Why do you like it?

Title:

_____

Final Test

20 questions · Vocabulary, Grammar, and Story

Part A – Vocabulary (10 questions)

1. A _____ is a place with many books.

A. library
B. river
C. garden

2. You use a _____ to open a locked door.

A. key
B. lamp
C. coat

3. An _____ holds a letter.

A. envelope
B. office
C. answer

4. A _____ shows the time.

A. clock
B. poster
C. gate

5. You put books on a _____.

A. shelf
B. seal
C. scarf

6. A _____ is a picture made with paint.

A. painting
B. meeting
C. station

7. People have a _____ to talk about a plan.

A. meeting
B. drawer
C. stamp

8. To _____ a door, you make it work again.

A. repair
B. follow
C. read

9. A _____ can hold old papers.

A. folder
B. shoe
C. river

10. The _____ is what really happened.

A. truth
B. clock
C. garden

Part B – Grammar (5 questions)

11. Yesterday Adam _____ a blue envelope.

A. find
B. found
C. finding

12. Emma _____ with Adam to the library.

A. go
B. goes
C. going

13. There _____ many books on the shelves.

A. is
B. are
C. am

14. The letter was _____ the envelope.

A. inside
B. over
C. between

15. They _____ to the station at night.

A. went
B. go
C. going

Part C - The Story (5 questions)

16. The blue envelope has a gold _____.

A. M
B. B
C. A

17. Miss Bell opened the library in _____.

A. 1808
B. 1908
C. 2008

18. The first book is _____.

A. red
B. green
C. black

19. The important paper has _____ names at the bottom.

A. two
B. three
C. five

20. At the end, the library is _____.

A. closed forever
B. a new hotel
C. open again

Score: _____ / 20

Answer Key

Check your answers after you finish the activities.

Reading Comprehension

1. A 2. B 3. B 4. A 5. C 6. A 7. B 8. B 9. A 10. A

11. B 12. B 13. A 14. A 15. A 16. A 17. B 18. A 19. A 20. A

Final Test - Part A: Vocabulary

1. A 2. A 3. A 4. A 5. A 6. A 7. A 8. A 9. A 10. A

Final Test - Part B: Grammar

11. B 12. B 13. B 14. A 15. A

Final Test - Part C: The Story

16. A 17. B 18. A 19. A 20. C

Short Answers - Sample Ideas

1. He remembers going to the library with his mother.
2. The note says, "Tell no one," and Emma thinks it may be a trick.
3. It opens a drawer in the old library desk.
4. It shows a place where something is missing from the wall.
5. Her first name is Margaret, and she is afraid of Mr Price.
6. He wants to keep the old sign and book safe from rain.
7. She reads that Miss Bell gave the building to the town as a free library.
8. They clean, paint, repair, and bring books.

Discussion and writing questions have more than one good answer.

WorldVoice Library

The Blue Envelope

A London Mystery

This graded reader includes:

- Seven complete mystery chapters
- Illustrations throughout the story
- A glossary of 40 key words
- Reading and discussion questions
- Writing practice and a final test
- Answers for independent study

WorldVoice Library

Read • Learn • Explore

A1
Beginner

Ahmed Al-Qashar

English graded reader · London mystery

ISBN / barcode space reserved for publication